

- And that's because, usually, around November, December, I motivate everybody to plan a whole another year.
- And this year, I sent out the message, "Well, it's just not a go right now, so just hang on." And what was interesting in doing that is I got an offer from Amie Windsor, who's also now part of the group as a runner, to consider publishing once a month in the paper a Sebastopol Walks column that has a featured route.
- I thought that would be really fun because we're advertising ourselves as a walking committee -- a walking community.
- So now I've just got to motivate the committee who has volunteered many times, to get a once-a-month thing up there if we all want to do it.
- And that also motivated Richard Nichols, our e-mail fellow, to send a blast out encouraging people to do the Peace Pole walk as part of their New Year's and holiday celebration, and folks actually did.
- There's this fun of doing it in person, but it's very interesting, of all these months of COVID, , we can just morph it into e-mailed information and newspaper information and let people have the responsibility, and there's so many people walking now, that's even more interest in it.

May we have a happy new year together with our community.
